36th ANNUAL LAW DAY CONFERENCE

Orange County Department of Education
Costa Mesa, California

The Constitutional Rights Foundation, Orange County (CRF-OC) is a non-partisan, non-profit organization dedicated to providing civic education to teens. CRF-OC does not take positions on political issues and does not endorse any of the views presented by the speakers of the Law Day Conference.

Notice to All Law Day Conference Participants: The aim of the Law Day Conference is to explore differing views of current legal issues as part of a civil, reasoned-based discussion from which students can draw their own conclusions. Students are encouraged to actively participate in the discussion and activities led by the moderators and presenters. Through the course of the discussion, students may have their own conclusions tested and challenged by the presenters and/or views of their peers. In order to create a positive and constructive learning environment, students should treat everyone with respect, while directing criticisms to the arguments people are making, not to the people who are making the argument.

How Free is Speech When Students Get Arrested For It?

In February 2010, the Israeli ambassador to the U.S. spoke at UCI. Palestinian students, enraged at his defense of Israeli actions, stood in turn while he was speaking and protested the speaker and the policies he defended. Each protestor was escorted out of the hall peacefully without resisting arrest. Ten students were arrested and convicted of crimes related to their disruptive speech. Where did the ambassador's speech rights end and the protesters' rights begin? Were the ambassador's free speech rights more valuable than the protesters' in this context? What right does the audience have to listen to the speaker or to listen to the protesters? Could you, should you go to jail for addressing a government official out of turn? Are there limits on the rights of peaceful protesters? The lead prosecutor and lead defense attorneys in this case will present both sides of the issue about what happens when speech rights collide.

Alexa—Are You Listening? Technology & the Fourth Amendment

Smart phones, activity trackers and other "smart" devices collect and store tons of information about our daily lives—but has the law caught up to these changes? In 1986 Congress passed the Stored Communications Act, which allows authorities to obtain information from third-party entities without a warrant. Should a warrant be required for this information now that tech companies collect and store far more information than basic telephone records? Is a court order enough? How can we balance our right to privacy while also giving investigators the tools they need to bring criminals to justice?

U.S. Immigration Policy: Past, Present & Future

Starting in the mid-1840s, immigrants all over the world began coming to the United States for many reasons. Since then, Congress has enacted immigration laws to regulate which immigrants are allowed to come into the U.S. But what about the undocumented immigrants who live in the U.S., such as the DREAMers? Who decides who gets to stay? Who has to leave? What should undocumented immigrants have to do to have a pathway to lawful immigration status in the U.S.?

Workshop #3 Room D-1001 (Building D)

Title IX & the Boundaries of Sexual Conduct on College Campuses

Engage in a discussion with attorneys and educators involved with Title IX and student sexual misconduct on college campuses. What type of actions are considered inappropriate on a college campus? Can a student go to jail for Title IX violations? Do the rules apply to me if I am in a consensual dating relationship? Can professors get in trouble too?
